Management's Discussion of Fund Performance

SUMMARY OF RESULTS

For the 12-month period ending October 31, 2025, the Fund incurred a loss. The Fund invests across a global set of liquid instruments spanning fixed income, currencies, commodities, and equities.

TOP PERFORMANCE CONTRIBUTORS

- Precious Metals: The Fund's long positioning in Precious Metals contributed meaningfully. The sub-sector benefited from persistent demand for haven assets and broad US Dollar weakness, as central banks and global investors increased allocations to tangible stores of value.

- Euro: Euro positioning also contributed. Toward the end of Q1 2025, the Fund's short exposure to the currency flipped long. This coincided with the European Central Bank's policy easing cycle appearing to run ahead of that of the Federal Reserve and the case for US exceptionalism increasingly being called into question.

- Hang Seng: Long exposure to Hang Seng furthered Fund gains. Investor sentiment toward China improved as US policymakers took a more conciliatory stance regarding trade and China's leadership demonstrated commitment to stabilizing growth and reinvigorating key sectors of the country's economy.

TOP PERFORMANCE DETRACTORS

- Industrial Metals: Industrial Metals exposure detracted. The Fund's positioning in the sub-sector proved mercurial, and prices of Industrial Metals fluctuated amidst rapidly evolving trade policy, subdued global manufacturing activity, and uneven demand from China.

- FTSE 100: The Fund's FTSE 100 exposure also weighed on results. The Fund maintained a long position in the market for most of the period, but UK equities remained torn between an impressive global market rally on the one hand and the country's strained public finances and mounting fears of stagflation on the other.

- Energy: Energy positioning also generated a loss. Exposure fluctuated as the sub-sector choppy moved sideways. Prices fell early in the year on deteriorating demand, surged briefly as tensions in the Middle East flared, and retraced lower as hostilities subsided and concerns over tepid growth in China, increased supply from OPEC+, and Russian sanction persisted.
